N.Y.U. To Coordinate Hebrew Studies At New Center

The first center for Hebrew studies to be operated by an American nonsectarian institution of higher learning has been established at New York University. Dr. Abraham I. Katsh, chairman of the N. Y. U. department of Hebrew Culture and Education, has been appointed director.

In announcing the establishment of the Institute of Hebrew Studies, Dr. George D. Stoddard, N. Y. U.'s chancellor and executive vice president, said the center's main function would be to coordinate the Hebrew study programs now being offered at several of the University's graduate and undergraduate divisions.

Dr. Stoddard said the Institute also would carry on a research program in ancient manuscripts, a professorial exchange with Israeli universities, and a training program for professors of Biblical and modern Hebrew, says the New York Times. Other programs include publication of a quarterly journal on recent studies in modern Hebrew language and culture, and a three-month summer session in Israel for American college and university students.

Perhaps the most complex program to be undertaken by the Institute will be the cataloguing of N. Y. U.'s collection of rare microfilmed manuscripts. The thousands of microfilms in the collection, which were obtained by Dr. Katsh from private and museum collections in Poland, Hungary, and the Soviet Union, comprise the only archive of its kind in the Western world.

Beginning in 1956, with grants from the Rockefeller Foundation and the American Council of Learned Societies, Dr. Katsh traveled behind the Iron Curtain obtaining films of rare manuscripts such as those contained in the Ringelblum Archives in Poland; the David Kaufmann Collection in Hungary; and the Baron David Guensburg Collection in the Soviet Union.

The microfilms are now kept at the N. Y. U. Library of Judaica and Hebraica, where they are in constant use by more than sixty scholars from twelve countries. Dr. Katsh is curator of the library. Future plans for the Institute also include the holding of an annual convocation of Biblical and Hebrew scholars to study recent archaeological and manuscript discoveries in the Holy Land.

As educational aids, the institute will prepare tapes to be used in Hebrew language instruction at the college level as well as textbooks on Hebrew culture and civilization.

The new center will conduct an expanded fellowship program for graduate students of Hebrew, and an annual public lecture series on the Land of the Bible, says the New York Times. Dr. Katsh, who recently returned from Israel, where he made arrangements for the summer study program, introduced a course in modern Hebrew at N. Y. U. in 1934.

Morocco Closes Hias, Jewish Aid Office, Charges Agency, Zionists Led Exodus; Civil Servants Involved

Morocco closed down the United Hias Service in Casablanca. The Jewish organization was charged with having encouraged massive departures of Moroccan Jews to Israel. The sudden police action coincided with King Hassan II's return from a Cairo meeting of African neutralists, says the New York Times from Rabat. The conference took a firm position against "Israeli intervention in African affairs."

The police will clamp down shortly on "other organizations involved in clandestine activity," the Moroccan press agency reported.

Nearly 25,000 Jews have emigrated from Morocco since a ban on mass departures was lifted last October. It was widely believed that Hias had chartered ships and planes for the emigrants and arranged for passports.

"Jewish citizens will continue to enjoy the same right to travel abroad as Moslems," a high Moroccan official declared, "but we cannot tolerate Zionist organizations here spreading propaganda to encourage massive departures to Israel."

The action against Hias (Hebrew Immigrant Aid Service) came at a time when leaders of Morocco's Jewish community had begun to feel that Jews had gained full citizenship rights. About 40,000 more Jews are expected to emigrate from Morocco. This would leave a Jewish population of about 100,000.

The Government daily newspaper, La Nation Africaine, announced that five civil servants of the Casablanca prefecture — including a member of the Governor's Cabinet and the chief of the passport section and his assistant — were found to have been involved in "a very important affair of corruption and illicit trading" of passports for Jews.

The leader of the "pasaport ring" was identified as Georges Harrar, a well-known astrologist of Casablanca. Mr. Harrar and nine others have been arrested.

Col. Driss Ben Aomar, Governor of Casablanca, said that Jews had the same right to passports as Moslems. He denounced corruption in his service and said that in the future he would personally supervise the delivery of passports.

The police also closed the Bonaparte Hotel, a transit center in downtown Casablanca for Jewish emigration, says the New York Times. Several weeks ago police discovered a group of sixty Jewish girls and boys under the age of twenty in the hotel.

Some of the young people were said to have testified that they had been held against their will by "members of a Zionist organization" until they could be flown to Israel.

Morocco, at the request of the Arab League, banned mass departures of Jews shortly after she gained independence from France in 1956. The Arabs felt that heavy immigration would increase the strength of the Israeli Army and lessen the chances for restoration of lands to Palestinian refugees.

Later, also at the request of the Arab League, Morocco cut off postal and telegraphic relations with Israel. Communications are not expected to be restored, but Jews there generally communicate with friends and relatives in Israel through contacts in Europe.

In other respects, Jews generally declare that they have not suffered from living in an independent Moslem state. There was an initial feeling of panic in the Jewish community prior to Moroccan independence. At that time Jewish leaders urged France to give them special guarantees, such as double nationality.

Emigration began in this period. In 1953 there were 260,000 Jews in Morocco, and by independence this figure had dropped to 190,000.

James P. Rice, executive director of the United Hias Service, confirmed at his home in New York, says the New York Times, that the organization's office in Rabat had been closed. "But I am reasonably confident that the thing will be straightened out with the Moroccan Government," Mr. Rice said. He said that he preferred to withhold further comment until he received fuller reports.

Five Sentenced To Death By Soviet For Speculation

Five men have been sentenced to death and thirteen have been given prison terms in Minsk on charges of speculation in foreign currency and gold. The results of the latest of a series of publicized trials for economic crimes were made public in the Byelorussian newspaper Sovetskaya Belorossiya, says the New York Times. The announcement of the sentencing of the ring which has been given the name "Bursak and company" for its accused leader, Mikhail Bursak, coincided with the publication in the Western press of an appeal to the Soviet Union to abandon the death penalty for economic crimes.

The appeal, signed by 223 prominent Americans, including Norman Thomas, the Socialist leader, was handed to Anatoly F. Dobrynin, the Soviet Ambassador in Washington, for transmittal to Moscow.

Foreign observers doubted that the appeal would deter the Soviet Government from its drive to root out what is considered one of the most serious offences in the Soviet society. It is felt that the Communist system would break down if private enrichment at the expense of the state continues unchecked.

Jews have been traditionally associated with commerce in Russia and a large percentage of the persons tried on charges of profiteering and speculation have been Jews. At least seven of the eighteen in the Minsk case have Jewish names.

The Bursak ring was said to have done business worth "millions of rubles" and to have had "several poods of gold" in its possession at the time of the arrests. A pood is thirty six pounds. The network extended to more than a dozen Soviet cities, including Riga, Kaunas, Vilna, Kishinev, Lvov, Leningrad, and Kiev, according to the trial account.

Bursak was identified as a fourth-time offender, having served a three-year sentence in the Nineteen Thirties for black market activity in shoes, another jail term for speculation during World War II, and eight years in the Fifties for grand larceny. His occupation was given as "private business man."

The others sentenced to death were: Khaim Khiger, a 40-year-

Precipitous Flight Of Algeria Wipes Out More Than Half Their Number

The exodus of Jews from Algeria has been even more precipitous than the flight of non-Jewish Europeans. In the last three months, about 22 per cent of the non-Jewish Europeans have left Algiers. Well-informed Jewish quarters estimate that more than 50 per cent of the Jews who were there at the end of March have left the country, says the New York Times writer, Thomas F. Brady. Departures in April, May, and June are estimated at 280,000 persons. Of these, about 60,000 have been Jews and the rest Christians. Moslem departures, though there have been some, are statistically negligible.

Some Jewish communities have virtually disappeared. It is estimated that of the 18,000 Jews who lived in Constantine in Eastern Algeria, only 2,000 remain.

The Jewish population of Algeria at the end of 1960 is estimated to have numbered 125,000. About 100,000 were French-educated, French-speaking merchants, civil servants, professional men, artisans, and skilled laborers who lived in the coastal regions, chiefly in the large cities.

The others were Arabic-speaking Jews of the interior, hardly distinguishable in their dress, speech, and commercial activity from their Moslem neighbors.

The Algerian Jews were spread over about ninety towns and villages, although 62 per cent of them lived in three cities, Algiers, Oran, and Constantine. In 1961 and the first three months of 1962 — that is, roughly, until the signing of the self-determination agreement between France and the Algerian Provisional Government that virtually assured Algerian independence — about 15,000 Jews emigrated from Algeria.

Of the remaining 110,000 Jews, it is estimated that 90,000 have left in the three months since the signing of the agreement. Of the 25,000 Arabic-speaking Jews of the interior, the estimates indicate that no more than 10 per cent remain in their villages and towns. Most of them, it is believed, have gone to Israel.

These rural Jews lived closely with their Moslem neighbors. Unlike the Jews of the north, they had not been "assimilated" by the large European population, says the New York Times. It is reported that the rural Jews felt "exposed" in an atmosphere of triumphant nationalism.

At Ghardaia, 400 miles south of Algiers, a Jewish "community" of 1,500 has completely disappeared. Jews report that there was a Moslem boycott of Jewish merchants and shopkeepers there last year and this year.

Jews also report that there were threats from Moslems. One threat that seems to have created concern, according to these unconfirmed reports, was, "you will have to give us your daughters."

Responsible nationalist representatives arrived in Ghardaia and gave assurances that the Jews' panic was groundless, that Jews would not be molested, that Algeria needed them and that their religion would be respected. But the assurances were too late. Fear had seized the community.

There were 900 Jews in Ghardaia June 1. Their leaders arranged with Air France to send extra planes to Ghardaia and prepared passenger lists for the company. By the middle of June the 900 Jews had left Algeria, most of them for Israel.

The Jews of the coastal cities have not emigrated to Israel, but have gone to France. At the end of March, it is estimated, there were 90,000 Jews in the coastal region. Today fewer than 50,000 remain.

The Jews of the coast consider themselves Europeans, although the ancestors of many of them reached Algeria before the Arab conquest. Jews from Spain brought Judaism there and even converted some Berbers to their faith before the advent of Islam.

The guarantees written into the self-determination accords for Europeans of Algeria were extended also to Jews, after some debate, because Jewish leaders declared to the nationalist negotiators that most Jews would not want the same status as that given Algerians.

One reason for Jewish panic is the deep complicity of many Jews in the terrorism of the European Secret Army Organization, says the New York Times. In Oran, for instance, where there were nearly 30,000 Jews, virtually the whole community joined the Secret Army last September after the murder of a Jew by a Moslem on Rosh Hashonah, the Jewish New Year.

old engineer; Meyer Vilensky, a 30-year-old shoemaker; Ivan Melnichuk, 54, who worked as a fireman in a boiler house; and Nikolai Kurchakov, a cashier, says the New York Times writer, Theodore Shabad. The prison sentences were from five to fifteen years for the thirteen others, whose ages ranged from 25 to 65.

CANADIAN JEWISH CONGRESS CONVENTION RESOLUTIONS COVER WIDE RANGE

for children in Jewish schools from the age of eight or nine; encouragement to the formation of a national, all-embracing Rabbinical and Synagogue Association in Canada within the framework of Congress; and for the extension of help to smaller Jewish communities who have no religious functionaries, the resolution urging that larger congregations adopt small communities and assist them in providing the religious services which they require.

The convention took note of the successful formation of a Central Fund for Traditional Institutions in Toronto and commended the formation of such central funds in other communities where warranted. The Canadian Jewish Congress was urged to strive to represent the universality of Jewish life in Canada and to assist the integration of groups and organizations of new immigrants into the Jewish community structure.

Expressing greetings to the state and people of Israel the convention called upon the Jewish community of Canada to continue to aid the Jewish state in every possible way. Another resolution on Israel welcomed the endeavours of the Canada-Israel Development Corporation to stimulate support for increased export production by the Jewish state. In a further resolution the objectives of the Israel Maritime League of Canada were approved.

A special resolution was adopted expressing felicitations to Melech Ravitch, Montreal Yiddish author, on the 50th anniversary of his literary career. The convention urged that the Warsaw Ghetto uprising be commemorated annually in every centre of Jewish population.

Dealing with community organization the convention took note of the agreement between Canadian Jewish Congress and the Canadian committee of the Council of Jewish Federations and Welfare Funds and urged the continuation of efforts to promote the goals of central community organization. The Congress convention urged the establishment of a national committee on leadership development.

The convention commended central fund-raising as a beneficent force in welding communities together in one common effort and warned that multiple appeals can be a destructive factor wasteful of manpower and campaign results. It urged communities who have not yet done so to consider the advantages of maximum unification of community programs and fund-raising, and to utilize the services of the joint national committee of Canadian Jewish Congress, and the Canadian committee of the Jewish Federations and Welfare Funds.

In view of the growing proportion of the aged in all communities Jewish communities were urged to intensify and broaden their activities and programs with the older generation.

★ JEWISH VOCATIONAL ★

Service luncheon was at the Regency Towers Hotel, Marvin Fremes, president, presiding. Other officers are: E. Manning Sprackman, senior vice-president; Robert Hall, David Mouckley, vice-presidents; Barrie D. Ross, treasurer; Harry J. Waisglass, secretary. Gurston S. Allen, Q.C., Max E. Enkin, Sydney M. Harris, Bryant M. Kassirer, Nathan Perlmutter, honourary directors. Directors are: Beryl Borsook, Donald Carr, Paul Clodman, Sydney Cooper, Samuel Crystal, Edel Direnfeld, Matthew Elman, Mrs. R. Farber, Philip Glassman, J. Barney Goldhar, Eric Goldstaub, Lippe Green, The Honourable Allan Grossman, Daniel Kert, Carl K. Keyfetz, Q.C.; Morris Latchman, Mrs. A. Levine, Murray Levine, Wilfred List, L. L. Lockshin, Joseph Macka, Dr. A. Miller, Henry Mulstein, H. A. Nisker, Rabbi David Ochs, J. I. Oelbaum, Allen Perly, Montague Raisman, Dr. Albert Rose, Ben Rose, Manny Rotman, Alvin Schrage, Leon Sharon, Stanley Shier, Jack Shindman, Saul Sigler, J. Skolnick, Julius Wiener, Saul Wolfe, directors. Milton Friedman, is executive director. Mr. Fremes reported that many of those applying for job placement were middle-aged persons whose skills were out-dated because of technology. In order to assist them, a training course in building maintenance services was begun with courses in material handling and inventory control to be given in the Fall. Forty men have completed the four-week program and 83% were placed in jobs as caretakers, maintenance men, and janitors. The course is conducted in cooperation with the Toronto Board of Education, and the National Employment Service in conjunction with the Canadian Vocational Training program five. The Jewish Vocational Service is trying to extend its individual vocational counseling services, especially for teen-agers, who need more guidance than is available in the public high schools. A suburban office has been established to make this service more accessible to teen-agers in outlying areas. Bnai Brith is being asked to join with this Service in starting a group guidance program to acquaint the teen-ager and his parents with the value of early career planning. More than four hundred individuals were assisted through counseling services in 1961. Louis Lockshin, immediate past-president, said the Jewish Vocational Service Rehabilitation Workshop aided more convalescent mental patients to re-establish themselves in employment in 1961, than in any previous year. The workshop program provides twelve weeks of counselling and paid work in a factory-type setting to patients about to leave mental hospitals. In 1961 more than 30% of those who completed the workshop program, were placed in regular employment, on-the-job training positions, or vocational schools. However, there is need to expand this program because of the large back-log of patients waiting to be admitted. Financial aid from the province is required for the necessary expansion, and Mr. Lockshin expressed hope that a provincial grant would be forthcoming. He said this Service aspires to establish a model rehabilitation centre for convalescent patients which could serve as a prototype for other communities in Ontario. He also described two new rehabilitation projects and which do not require a heavy investment. A workshop program, with counselling services included, for Welfare Agency clients thought to be unemployable has yielded dramatic results in a two-month test. One third of those admitted to the special workshop were found to be employable and another third, still under study, show promise of becoming partially self-supporting. This workshop will be continued on a permanent basis and assistance from the Ontario Department of Welfare will help to finance it. A sheltered workshop, based at the Jewish Home for the Aged, also has begun to operate. It is hoped that this work will stimulate the residents and help to retard the physical and psychological decline often associated with the aging.

Not Wanted: Immigrants Without Skill And Strength

BY MELVIN BENJAMIN, OF ISRAEL FEATURE SERVICE

"Send us more immigrants but don't send us any more social cases," was the plea of Armand Laredo, the dynamic young mayor of Dimona, during his recent meeting with Jewish Agency representatives. "Our town is based on construction work, agricultural labour, and industry. Don't send us any more immigrants who cannot work in one of these three fields," wrote the chairman of the Local Council of Ofakim.

This is a sample of what they say in twenty-four development towns throughout Israel, from Kiryat Shmonah in the North to Eilat in the South. Immigrants? Certainly, but only people who can adjust to the difficult conditions of these new towns. The people of the development towns, which currently absorb about two thirds of all new arrivals, are neither selfish nor unreasonable. Yet by now, each place has received more social problem cases than its limited economic resources and its still tenuous social fabric can support. Local taxes barely suffice to cover the towns' share in the most essential services, and the allowances which the Ministry of Welfare supplies for needy families are pitifully inadequate.

"We do what we can," explains Mayor Laredo. "Every newcomer costs us some $60 in relief from municipal taxes and free services during his first year here, but we don't mind this because it is temporary. It is only when people cannot find work month after month that we begin to worry. Recently the case load of our local welfare office has risen from 90 to 160 families. That's a lot for a town the size of Dimona."

If Dimona, one of the best development towns, which offers full employment for its able-bodied citizens, can hardly cope with its load of social cases, what of places like Ofakim and Kiryat Shmonah, which depend heavily on seasonal agricultural work in the surrounding settlements? Here, even the young and able-bodied often have to compete for light work otherwise reserved for the handicapped.

As a result, a paradoxical situation is evolving: on the one hand, Israel continues in its determination to receive every Jew in need, regardless of his age or capacity; on the other hand, the development towns, the fastest growing sector of Israel, fear that they will have to hang out the "no room" sign for handicapped or elderly newcomers. They require people who can build houses, run factories, work in the surrounding agricultural settlements, in short, who have the physical strength and skills needed to build a town which will eventually be able to help support those who cannot fully support themselves.

The Jewish Agency, the body responsible for the reception and resettlement of Israel's newcomers, would like to heed the plea of the development towns. Yet, in practice, it has little choice. It cannot send large numbers of new arrivals to the cities which are already top-heavy in comparison with the rest of the country. It cannot build or acquire substantial numbers of flats in urban areas where real-estate costs are skyrocketing. In short, it must continue the policy of sending at least part of the newly arrived social cases to development areas, realizing fully the problems they create.

Yet the Jewish Agency must and does attempt to help the new towns in shouldering this heavy burden. In the first few weeks, this is a matter of squeezing additional allocations for the maintenance of needy families out of the tight budget of the Agency's absorption department. In the long run, however, relief, whether extended by the Ministry of Welfare of the Israel Government, is no solution. "We did not come here to receive charity. We came to work", read the sign carried by a group of demonstrators outside the Jewish Agency's headquarters in Jerusalem. In the fast-growing development towns, a man without work may feel even more outcast than in a bustling metropolis.

At the moment, the Jewish Agency's activities on behalf of social cases in the development towns covers only a fraction of what must be done if these towns are not to grow up with a built-in sector of under-privileged citizens. As one Jewish Agency official puts it: "We must do more and we must do it fast while everything is still moving. If we wait too long, these people will lose hope and when a man loses hope, he is often beyond rehabilitation."

Canadian Jewish Congress Convention Resolutions Cover Wide Range

The problems of Jewish education, culture, and language received top priority in the discussion of resolutions at the Canadian Jewish Congress convention at the King Edward Hotel, in Toronto. Particular attention was given to the demand for greater support for Jewish Day Schools, an issue which was widely discussed. In resolving this issue the seven hundred delegates from all parts of Canada adopted a resolution recognizing that the intensification of Jewish education is vital for Jewish survival in Canada and that the Jewish Day School provides an opportunity for maximal Jewish education.

The resolution takes note of the fact that the existing Jewish Day Schools are beset by financial problems that jeopardize their continued existence. It therefore recommends the establishment by the Canadian Jewish Congress of a national study commission to explore ways and means of meeting the financial requirements of the Jewish Day Schools through the development of new sources of revenue. The proposed national study commission is asked to consider the possibility of seeking support from public as well as private sources, and ways and means to implement policies in relation to such support, but with due regard for the divergent views that exist in the Jewish community on this question.

The commission is also asked to consider the difference in the common school systems in various jurisdictions in Canada. It has been charged with bringing in a report to the national executive of Congress within one year.

Another major resolution adopted by the Congress recognized the fundamental importance for Jewish survival of strengthening and fostering the Jewish languages, Hebrew, and Yiddish. It calls upon the national executive of Congress to encourage the establishment of chairs in Yiddish and Hebrew language and culture and Jewish history. It was urged that Hebrew and Yiddish be included in public affairs under Congress auspices; that the Congress Bulletin include a Yiddish section in every issue and that Congress letterheads include Yiddish and Hebrew. Congress was also asked to train secretaries and stenographers in the Yiddish language.

Another resolution on communal responsibility for Jewish education calls upon all these communities which do not cover Jewish education in their welfare fund campaigns to establish funds or to include the schools in the existing communal fund-raising campaigns.

The resolution on archives and history emphasizes the need for a central office of Jewish information with regard to the history of the Jews in Canada and in all matters affecting Jewish life in all lands. It directs that the Samuel Bronfman House, to be erected in Montreal as the National Congress headquarters, shall contain adequate facilities for the national archives; that all records pertaining to Jewish life in Canada, shall be collected for safe keeping in the archives; and that the Congress headquarters shall also contain a library of Jewish information. It also proposes encouragement to the formation of a Jewish historical society and consideration for the establishment of a national Jewish museum at the Samuel Bronfman House.

Elements which carry on pro-Fascist and hate-mongering activity are still to be found in this country, states another resolution adopted at the Congress convention. Pointing to the fact that there is as yet no legislation which deals adequately with these malefactors, the resolution urges that the spirit of the Genocide Convention which was signed by Canada should be incorporated into the laws of Canada. The Canadian Jewish Congress is urged to take all steps necessary to bring about amendments to the criminal code to make it a criminal offense to preach hate-mongering, race-slaughter, or genocide towards any ethnic or religious groups; and that this be done without infringing on the democratic freedoms of Canadians.

The same resolution also urges that Canadian education institutions be encouraged to foster understanding of the background and repercussions of Nazism in the 1930's and the 1940's in the teaching of modern history; and that the true lessons of race prejudice not be over-looked in the curriculum. The Canadian Jewish Congress re-affirmed its active opposition to religious education in the public schools in those provinces where public schools exist.

A resolution on anti-discrimination laws took note of the existence of such laws in six provinces and in the Federal jurisdiction and commended those Governments which have introduced or improved such legislation and accompanied it with adequate educational and enforcement provisions and urged the strengthening of scope and impact of this legislation. There was a special commendation to the Ontario Government for its action in codifying the existing anti-discrimination, and for engaging a full-time person to co-ordinate and enforce this legislation. Further efforts were urged to obtain similar legislation in the remaining provinces with other provinces urged to follow the Ontario pattern.

In discussing plans for the celebration of Canada's centenary the Congress called upon the Canadian Government to intensify its work towards reaching agreements making possible the formal incorporation of the Bill of Rights in the Canadian constitution, with the year 1967 as the target date."

In view of the current political turmoil in North Africa which also places the Jewish community of that country in a crisis the convention recommended that the officers of Congress urge the Canadian Government to facilitate the emigration of those Jews of Algeria who wish to make their home in this country.

Other resolutions adopted by the Congress included support for the Jewish libraries of Montreal and Toronto; the introduction of Jewish current events and discussions

Joseph Berman, 3440 Ridgewood Avenue, Montreal, a Montreal business and community leader, has given an Exhibition Hall in the Hebrew University, in Jerusalem, Israel. News of his gift was made known by Michael Greenblatt, Q.C., national chairman of the endowment and bequest committee of the Canadian Friends of the Hebrew University, and Bernard M. Bloomfield, president of the Montreal Chapter. Contributed by Mr. and Mrs. Berman, the Exhibition Hall will be established in the Jewish National and University Library, the central building on the new Jerusalem campus, in memory of their son, Norman Berman, and their grandchildren, Jonathan David, aged seven years; and Elyse Joy, five, who were tragically killed in an accident a year ago. The announcement by Mr. Greenblatt and Mr. Bloomfield said: "Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Berman have long been leaders and supporters of a host of cultural and educational institutions in North America and abroad. This memorial will serve not only the University, but the people of Israel and indeed all world Jewry, for in it will be displayed priceless books, artistic works, and archaeological exhibits that constitute the history and heritage of the Jewish people." Joseph Berman was born in the district of Plock, Russia, and is the son of Mechem Berman, who was a scholar and a student of the famed Rabbi Aaron Karlinaer. For many years he has been one of the strongest supporters of Hebrew and Yiddish culture in North America, and his warm personal interest and influence have encouraged many Hebrew and Yiddish scholars and authors to complete literary works vital to the cultural life of the community. Mr. and Mrs. Berman were received by the President of the State of Israel, Itzhak Ben Zvi, and were honoured at receptions given by the Hebrew University of Jerusalem, the Hebrew Authors Club, and other cultural and educational institutions.
